Asking rent growth is estimated to reach <money>$26.36</money> per square foot at the end of the year before rising to <money>$27.12</money> per square foot by the end of 2027.   "Compared with the prior forecast, the near-term vacancy outlook has strengthened as second-half demand outperformed earlier expectations," said <person>Brandon Svec</person>, national director of retail analytics at <org value="NASDAQ-NMS:CSGP" idsrc="xmltag.org">CoStar Group</org>. "Demand is expected to cool in 2027, however, as annual net absorption is projected to fall roughly 15 million square feet, which would trail 16.8 million square feet of anticipated deliveries. Limited availability continues to support pricing, even as slower near-term demand and a gradual slowing in retail sales growth moderate the pace of acceleration."   "The forecast carries risks on both sides, though the balance remains tilted to the downside," said Svec. "Higher energy prices and inflation could further erode the cushion for consumers while pressuring retailer margins, while an even-higher-for-longer interest rate environment could weigh on business formation, retailer expansion and development activity. These risks, however, should be viewed against a retail market that remains fundamentally tight, with low vacancy and limited new construction providing a meaningful buffer against a softer economic environment."
